The Duke, usurped by Frederick, lives in the Forest of Arden, but his daughter, Rosalind, remained at court. Orlando, earns Rosalind's admiration by winning a wrestling match, but excites Frederick's ire and flees to Arden. Frederick banishes Rosalind to Arden, and his daughter, Celia, accompanies her. Rosalind disguises herself as a boy, Ganymede, and Celia as his sister, Aliena. While Orlando hangs love poems to Rosalind on trees, Ganymede buys a flock of sheep and tests his love for Rosalind. All ends happily: marriages all round and, on Frederick withdrawing to a monastic life, the Duke restored to his rightful position.
