

grey porridge cars

The buyer of a Lexus is the kind of person, who, if he did not have the good fortune to be able to afford it, would have bought a Hyundai Sonata or, a few years back, a Datsun Cherry. The last featured large in a lecture on terms and conditions of business. I shared the platform on several occasions with an academic on a course about drafting commercial documents. He illustrated the implied condition of fitness for purpose by showing that anyone who actually chose to buy a Datsun Cherry thereby forfeited all implied rights that he might otherwise have had.

© Roderick Ramage 22.v.2007