

A Midsummer Night's Dream

What fun you can have when four star-crossed lovers and some mechanicals rehearsing their play enter the wood outside Athens, that is the faerie realm of Oberon, Titania and the mischievous Puck; and you have a magic flower, a drop from which squeezed onto another's eyes will cause the other to fall in love with whatever she or he first sees on awakening. Chaos ensues when Puck squeezes drops onto the wrong eyes. Oberon's antidote restores happiness to the young couples, who are reconciled and marry each other, and the mechanicals perform their play to celebrate the Duke of Athens' wedding.

© Roderick Ramage 1.ii.2016